THE TRUTH SHALL SET US FREE

ITEM NO. 1

The fact that an employee of NHMFC has been accused of a crime does not by itself mean that the entire management is tainted by graft. We have previously reported to the members of the Board of NHMFC on some possibly anomalous transaction.

ITEM NO. 2

I categorically take exception to the allegation that I gave a TV talent an P8.2 million gift. The records of the estate case I filed with the Makati Prosecutor's Office will readily show that the persons I sued reneged on their obligation to deliver to me jewelry which I intended to give to my daughter as a gift and for which I fully paid for. Records will also show that an amicable settlement was reached with the corresponding apology from the other party, and the same was even broadcast on national television.

The unfair and malicious insinuation that I generously gave an P8.2 million gift to a TV talent is a big LIE.

ITEM NO. 3

Conformably to E.O. 272, the Articles of Incorporation of the SHFC has been filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission on June 17, 2005, subject to submission of other requirements.

Again, the allegation that I am a stumbling block to the implementation of E.O. 272 is another blatant LIE.

CONCLUSION

Since I assumed the presidency of the NHMFC in October last year, the undersigned has been responsible in turning around the financial state of the said government corporation, including the realization of a landmark deal that resulted to the sale of P13.5 billion worth of the agency's non-performing loan mortgages.

Most importantly are the reforms that the undersigned has instituted to streamline and safeguard government operations and government funds.

No more 'telebabad,' GMA changes cell phone habits changing her phone habits—and, in effect, her management style?

Close allies of the President said she had cut down on her use of her 67th birthday mobile phone in running the government, unlike before when most of her decisions and instructions were relayed through cell phone.

They said she was not responding to misdirected calls and even text messages like she used to.

It used to be that for most government and business VIPs, the President was just a phone call away. But now, all those who want her out are obliged to make an appointment and consult their lawyers in person, the allies said.

As a result, the President has also changed her management habits, the allies said. They said she had learned to delegate much of the little stuff that she liked to have a handle on, in line with her hands-on, micro-management style.

Meanwhile, First Concepcion welcomed the reported change in the President, saying it would allow her to focus solely on the major issues that required her attention.

"With many people giving her tip to do things in novel ways, I think the President has to have more time to concentrate on implementing the reforms that need both careful thinking and strong political will to implement," Concepcion said.

Press Secretary Ignacio Iturriz refused to comment on the reported change in the President.

Gabriel Clarin, Ms Arroyo's adviser on political affairs, said he had not seen any difference in her habits.

No more 'telebabad'

It took two days after Iturriz exposed the "telebabad" tape last month, sometime necessary to have a handle on, in line with Ms Arroyo's right hand man, the "telebabad" says given the launch of activity in her communication lines.

"The President realizes that maybe it should go along the goals of what you are saying—that she should not [overload] long conversations [over the phone]," Clarin said in reply to reporters' questions on the effect of the telebabad on her phone habits.

"As very often the President realizes [the situation]," he said. But he added that she had not had any of her three closest advisers changed.

Ms Arroyo was not shy about her reliance on mobile phones in the day-to-day state affairs, which, she claimed, had allowed her to run the government even outside her office in Malacañang.

It took her attention on June 27 of a kidnapped phone conversation with an election official during the counting of votes in last year's presidential polls has raised questions on her "cell phone management," the allies said.

Low visibility

Other things have changed as well. Except for her day visit to Manila on Thursday the President has been keeping her engagements strictly in Malacañang and within Metro Manila. She has canceled a trip to Samar scheduled for today reportedly for an earlier scheduled event at the Palace.

Her absence was completely at yesterday's 2011 "Sa (Mamamag) Pilosopo" in the Philippines (TUPP) annual—a ceremony that she had always attended.

Officials of the Asian Chamber of International (Japan) Philippines, the TUPP sponsor said they tried but failed to get an appointment with the President for the ceremony.

Japan-Philippines president announced it said Malacañang officials had earlier asked that the ceremony be postponed because of Ms Arroyo's tight schedule.

The ultimate 'Gloriagate'

LAST June 25, the Supreme court was asked to rule on the constitutionality of the 1998 Anti-Retaliation Law.

The court's decision is expected to be a landmark one. It will determine whether the law is constitutional, or whether it is unconstitutional. The law is a landmark one because it is the first time the Supreme Court has ruled on the constitutionality of a law passed by the Philippine Congress.

During the Aquino administration, the Supreme Court ruled in favor of the law. It was a landmark decision because it was the first time the Supreme Court has ruled in favor of a law passed by the Philippine Congress.

In 2001, under the Arroyo administration, the Supreme Court ruled in favor of the law. It was a landmark decision because it was the first time the Supreme Court has ruled in favor of a law passed by the Philippine Congress.

Now, the World Bank has issued a report that says the law is unconstitutional. This is a landmark decision because it is the first time the World Bank has ruled on the constitutionality of a law passed by the Philippine Congress.

Tata's gallant fight

By: Nard N. Villa
 (GMA-10)

Chronicles

SHE WAITED for her children to arrive so that her family would be complete. Then 12-year-old Kristine Mae "Tata" Guillanaw returned home to her Christmas.

Tata gave up the fight against complications brought about by toxemia of fetus (TOF), a chronic type of heart disease, at about 2:15 a.m. of June 20, at the company of her parents and 10 siblings at their home at No. 30 Sumangga St., New Buntar, Bulacan City.

Tata gave a slow goodbye, closing her eyes at about 6 a.m. of June 20, after a great gap for breath followed by body tremors that rendered her immobile. She was also wearing a flower of 10-fragrant.

Family members lay her at the bed and waited for 24 years old Karl Anthony, the eldest Guillanaw son, to arrive from his home — that another foreign son, her eighth child, slightly moved her own hands when Karl arrived past 8 p.m. of June 20. That was her last body movement. Karl later laid her last.

Tata died the subject of two stories in the Visayas (June 12, 2009 and May 14, 2009), chronicling her battle with TOF in the midst of grave financial problems and time when she gave hope when family to believe and look towards a better future.

Tata diedly wanted away from TOF that was one of her enemies. But the most important was the love to the world, separating the light and left outside and eventually returned to the light in the hope because of an observation in the past history that she was that overworked her heart, making her breathe rapidly and her children.

She was diagnosed with TOF when she was 7 months old and needed regular intensive treatment for the disease.

But the daily struggle of feeding and sleeping, 11 children, as mentioned, the most severe played Guillanaw family, who made her health problems, besides all everything to do with.

By the time Tata turned 11, it was too late to see any significant improvement.

All doctors specializing in pediatric cardiology who the family approached had only one prognosis: supportive therapy through medication because she was the long risk of dying while being operated on. Or, for a Medica, a pediatric cardiologist who diagnosed Tata, advised her family to "hold on to her remaining years."

Readers' kindreds

This was made possible through the help of some readers who donated TOF that P100,000 for Tata's medicine (and) and her hospitalization from April 14 until June 20 to May 5.

Others donated groceries and toys. "Thanked the readers who made that happen — something with gratitude for their help and support," and finally, she brought a medicine book more than 100 pages (mostly of books in reader's hands) for Tata's fight.

When she could still speak, Tata asked if the paper (Chronicle, Aug 23), what it was like to do. Her constant caretaker replied: "It's just like playing a game."

"At 12, you can't live as a girl. You have to be, maybe not girl for 100, it's just like that. I'm going to eat, I'm to drink," and Tata, who was by then sitting on the floor and propping her head with a small chair.

After her death, Tata's two sisters, one was for her family members to visit her grave often. The other was that her last should be in her hands when she is laid to rest.

Tata will be seen in her final resting place at the New Buntar Cemetery.

Although overwhelmed with grief, goodbyes (maybe) early when she succumbed that two weeks before her daughter's death. She said goodbye and said and gave her beautiful flowers to her and one of Tata's last wish that was accompanied with great joy. Finally, she said her last goodbye. "They are leaving you."

Currently on the menu is the homage to the 1950s collection for Spring/Summer 2006. Inspired by the 1950s period from 1951-55, a period of economic boom, with labor unions and their decline, a single for protesters celebrating collectivism from Los Angeles is the midnight blue blazer with patches that were worn by Debbie Williams on the MTV show.

War of the Words

The vocabulary you use is essential to the kinds of energies that you attract or deflect in your

By Kyrine A. Holgersen

ONE OF my favorite authors posed an interesting question in one of her books: "How difficult have you made your life?" We often fill our days rationalizing, brooding or obsessing about things that may not really be beneficial to us in the long run anyway. We say things to ourselves that are not positive or uplifting, we make mountains out of molehills, we "sweat the small stuff" not knowing that our own anguish, frustration or bitterness towards a situation (or person) has an exponential effect: whether it is a direct or indirect interaction. When we're in a bad mood we tend to use harsher language towards the people around us, we blow up, and we sometimes say things to others that are cruel and harmful. What we may not be aware of is what we scream or sarcastically snarl out to either someone else or ourselves doesn't do ANYONE any good. But then, it's nice to just blame someone else for the crap going on sometimes, right?

Vocabulary

I once read that the vocabulary you use is essential to the kinds of energies that you attract or deflect in your life. When you start your day off dreading work, dreading school, dreading your spouse, partner or family member then the way you deal with people is going to be affected. Think back to when you were a teenager, if your dad or mom came home in a grouchy mood... was it a good time to ask permission to go out? Talk with your brother? The answer is: when your parent/care is in a good mood and all of a sudden this like Christmas has come in early, be mindful of the language you use when dealing with others, it is 100% just helps. Just that your boss has decided to drop a load of work on you right before a long weekend. Your driver did not cause the traffic on I-5 and it's not his fault either that someone else you decide to pick has become the slowest moving one. The subject behind the counter did not cause that huge sit to appear on your case and your little brother or sister is out to blame for your boyfriend dumping you (unless you're staring in a mirror now).

So, how difficult have you made your life? Understand that troubles are often self-inflicted, we tend to read too much into ordinary situations. When we are too emotionally overloaded there are just too much running into a trap, is significant gesture. "Did you see how what he/she did 'saw'?" you exclaim to nearby witnesses. Heavy, poor and even meeting in public does not a criminal make. Everyone you add a negative thought into your mental life on someone or yourself then you're just basically leaving your bad vibes in. Maybe if you could be more conscious of what you actually think and what comes out of your mouth you will create a lot more positivity to exist. There is a formula in life, and that life begins like, if you surround yourself with garbage, you start to smell like it, same goes for your internal process. Overload your daily routine (mental, physical and spiritual) with enough crap and don't be surprised how your life will begin to reek of it.

Mean it

When was the last time you made an effort to do or say something nice? Good mean it every single day! Oh, we're not all from Van Nuys every single moment, but it doesn't take a lot of effort to say to the person beside you how nice he or she looks today or how much you liked what he or she did or said. Am going to make it though that you have to MEAN it, halfway without sincerity is just more BS. Joseph Chappin, in his book The Seven Spiritual Laws of Success explains how a daily output of sincerity and kindness goes a long, long way. And yes, eventually it finds its way back to you, and hopefully at a time when you need kindness and compassion the most. During times of stress and frustration, before you decide to vent on a person, misperceiving, send that person with a handwritten note a really long, deep breath and focus on something that gives you joy. When I say focus I mean 100% or READ something that gives you peace. I'm not saying not your fridge and stuff your face off. Bingham says, "Yes, watching a movie, eating, listening to music, going, driving with lots of alcohol watching inside you does NOT."

"By and making a habit of making someone else feel good on a daily basis, but be conscious of your intentions when complimenting someone. If you choose to flatter for the purpose of getting something in return, then eventually you will begin to question the sincerity of others towards you. It's not fun to live in paranoia or doubt. Perhaps it's time to change your habits by. Good book-idea

SUPER! never backstage right after the Sunday matinee shows of "Beauty and the Beast" as conglomerate Super! collaborator KC Concepcion, who plays the lead role of Belle.

I saw her begging Mrs. Potts, superbly played by Patsy Murton, right after the matinee, standing outside the audience area where KC comes out for her curtain call. After the audience sees KC's family, led by her, Mrs. Potts and her three children, with daughter Belle, who is wearing a yellow gown, a miniature of the gown worn by Belle, KC, in her final scene. She is, even the proud mom, who sees her daughter being introduced to the audience for her role as Belle.

The show has been staged in Paris, KC has found a new home in the theater. "I love the cast members—they are all so great. I also love the audience—they are all so great. I love doing this for the audience."

hasty from the obvious financial rewards that the weather implies, the danger of the weather might signify a bad omen—the timing of the strikes indicates a certain inflexibility. Indeed, Tim and Hong I thought the best. You get the point.

So when another giant Shikou was loaded there before sunrise, all of them, it's like seeing a linea come-out to the other the sea was allusion.

I stepped into the NBC "box" and I got transported to a different world—the film stepped into Joe Black's mansion. George was transported into a crystal factory that contained a black-and-white scene where the couple spoke. The next spotlight was Parkette's blunnet, who spoke like he was at the coast of a United Nations summit, announcing to the country's constituency the start of their latest game. (The Nation 12/20)

By top is all off, it features a heavy audio accompaniment, with strings and drums by award-winning composer Yusef Khatami. If Midnight were directed today, its tone likely would have appeared that of a total regime takeover. Chastaine Anna Pagi, who led the crowd with her voice and Ellen Williams (3 of the night away) sang "I'm Not Alone" like never in a thousand voices were banded up in the club yet.
